June Shoot Notes

The other day on the ITBA message board we were discussing the dang hot weather. It's not been good for outdoorsmen like us. Then Tim writes in saying that he cuts grass all day and then goes stumpin'. Said we might need to toughen up a little. All I can say is if someone can go by and get a picture of him mowing in 98 degrees, that I would like to see it. That photo might wind up as famous as that one of the Indiana mountain lion.

Anyway, it's July and no relief in sight. It reminds me of a famous saying "Carpe Diem". Translated that means "Seize The Carp". You see you might be hoping for a nice mess of bluegills, or some slab crappie, or even a tasty flathead. Instead life hands you a stinking bugle mouth carp. Seize that carp and go shooting no matter what the weather. So if the forecast for the July shoot is hazy, hot, and humid – seize the carp and I'll see you there.

Maybe that's what Tim was doing after all. Seizing the carp on a stinking, slimy, miserable day. That might be why it sounds kind of fishy to me.

The June shoot: 31 shooters braved the heat.
